DEVLOPMENT BANK LTD.*Versus STATE OF GUJARAT & ANR.
=====Appearance:*MR.AMIT R JOSHI(6682) for the Applicant(s) No. 1*MS. C.M. SHAH, APP for the Respondent(s) No. 1*RULE SERVED for the Respondent(s) No. 2
=====CORAM:HONOURABLE MS. JUSTICE S.V. PINTO*Date : 14/08/2026*ORAL ORDER

1. Rule is served to the respondent No.2, but when the matter is called out, none has appeared for the respondent No.2 either in-person or through an advocate.

2. The present application seeks condonation of delay of 169 days in preferring the accompanying Criminal Revision Application challenging the judgment and order passed by the learned Sessions Judge affirming the conviction and sentence recorded by the learned Trial Court.

4. The applicant has explained the delay by stating that after pronouncement of the impugned judgment, certified copies were obtained, legal advice was sought and necessary documents required for filing the revision application were collected. It is contended that the delay was neither intentional nor deliberate but occasioned due to circumstances beyond the control of the applicant.

5. I have considered the submissions of the learned advocate and perused the material placed on record.

7. The law relating to condonation of delay is no longer res integra. In Collector, Land Acquisition, Anantnag v. Mst. Katiji reported in (1987) 2 SCC 107, the Hon'ble Supreme Court has observed that a liberal approach should ordinarily be adopted while considering applications for condonation of delay so as to advance substantial justice. The Court observed that refusal to condone delay may result in a meritorious matter being thrown out at the threshold and cause of justice being defeated.

8. In N. Balakrishnan v. M. Krishnamurthy reported in (1998) 7 SCC 123, the Supreme Court has observed that the length of delay is not material; what is material is the acceptability of the explanation. It was further held that unless mala fides or gross negligence are imputable to the party seeking condonation, the Court should lean in favour of deciding matters on merits.

9. The Supreme Court has also reiterated in several subsequent decisions that while “sufficient cause” must be established, the expression should receive a pragmatic and justice-oriented interpretation where refusal to condone delay would result in denial of a statutory remedy and where no serious prejudice is demonstrated by the opposite side.

10. In the present case, the delay is of 169 days. The explanation furnished by the applicant cannot be said to be lacking in bona fides. There is nothing on record to indicate that the delay was deliberate, intentional or actuated by any ulterior motive. Equally, no irreparable prejudice is shown to be caused to the respondent if the delay is condoned. On the contrary, refusal to condone the delay would result in the applicant being deprived of an opportunity to challenge the impugned judgment on merits in exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court.

11. Having regard to the nature of the proceedings, the explanation tendered by the applicant and the principles laid down by the Hon’ble Supreme Court, this Court is satisfied that sufficient cause has been made out for condonation of delay. Accordingly, the application is allowed.

12. The delay of 169 days in filing the Criminal Revision Application is condoned.

13. Rule is made absolute in the aforesaid term.
